

Agnieszka Pac, MSc., PhD

Jagiellonian University Medical College, Kraków
Department of Epidemiology and Preventive Medicine

Assistant professor the Department of Epidemiology and Preventive Medicine Jagiellonian University Medical College in Krakow. She has graduated in mathematics at the Jagiellonian University. In 2005 she completed her Phd and in 2014 received the title of habilitated doctor at the Medical Faculty of the Jagiellonian University Medical College.

Her main area of interest are application of statistical methods in scientific research and research methodology in the area of medical and health sciences. In her work she is involved in planning and conducting scientific research in the field of environmental epidemiology.

She is involved in applications of advanced statistical methods in analysis of collected scientific data.

For many years she has been teaching research methodology and statistics to PhD students.

She is a head of postgraduate studies on Biostatistics in Postdiploma Medical Training Center of the Jagiellonian University.